Working with layers A `_layer_` is an area of a Photoshop image that enables you to work with images of different kinds and in different ways on top of each other. Creating layers enables you to easily work with different parts of a photo and to easily put those parts together to create one powerful image. Layers also make it easy to quickly undo your work. The layers concept can confuse people at first. The layers are the fundamental building block of all images you work in Photoshop. Each layer can have multiple parts — they can be transparent or opaque. The process of layering and using multiple layers effectively is very important for the novice. Master the concept of layers and you can use Photoshop to manipulate and change the look of thousands of images at the same time. When you first open a new image, it appears in your Photo Bin window. You can't see individual layers. All you can see are the layers that are already in the image. The layers that are in an image are numbered and are located one above the other. You can also see the active layer in your Photo Bin window. The active layer is the current layer of the image you are working with. However, you can easily change the active layer. Click the menu and choose Window. Alternatively, choose Photoshop⇒Window and then choose Active Layer from the menu at the top of the window. The left side of the Photoshop Photo Bin window shows the image in its current state. The bottom right corner of the window is where you can select items and modify them. (Note that if you choose To Photo Editing Window from the menu bar at the top of the Photoshop Photo Bin window, the Photoshop Photo Bin window functions differently and its features don't display on the Photo Bin window.) Photoshop displays the individual layers of an image in the Photo Bin window like this: 1. All

In the southern Philippine region of Mindanao, at least eight people were killed and six were wounded when militants from the New People's Army (NPA) raked the town of Baganga in Albay province with automatic fire on Tuesday. Two of the wounded succumbed to their wounds while the other four are recovering, the Philippine Army said in a statement on Wednesday, adding that a joint security force had been deployed to secure the area. ADVERTISEMENT The military could not yet confirm if the attacks were linked to the New People's Army, also known as the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP), and the Moro National Liberation Front, or MNLF. However, a spokesman for the group told AFP that Mindanao militants were targeting the town on Wednesday after the discovery of a weapons cache in Guihulngan, a town nearby, on Tuesday. Last week, the NPA also launched a joint offensive against military and police forces in southern Philippines following the arrest of five of its members in connection with the killing of young student Marlo Estaño. According to the AFP, the Philippine military has been battling a wave of attacks by NPA-led NDFs in Mindanao for the past year. Violence has broken out several times in Mindanao over the last two years with the Philippine military launching airstrikes on suspected militant hideouts while the group, which has been holding peace talks with the government, has conducted attacks on military installations and checkpoints. The Mindanao violence has been in part linked to the emergence of Moro-dominated groups within the NPA which work in alliance with the MNLF, AFP said. ADVERTISEMENT The military was able to capture and kill several prominent militants, including the leader of the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters (BIFF) alliance in a series of raids in 2017. In December 2017, the NPA launched a major attack in the Zamboanga Peninsula, southern Philippines, which led to at least 60 deaths in just two days. It was the first major violence between the NPA and the military in over a year and was also the deadliest of 2017, with an estimated 300 people killed. At least five of the militants linked to the Zamboanga siege surrendered to the military in February but have yet to face trial or face imprisonment. The NPA has also been linked to a series of bomb blasts in Metro
